

Domestic Abuse - Call for Programmes

The Early Intervention Foundation and What Works for Children's Social Care are working together to increase understanding of what works to support children affected by domestic abuse, including in instances where intimate partner violence is present. This project is funded by the Department for Education.

What we are doing and why

Our understanding of what works to support children affected by domestic abuse is limited, and yet we know that this is a highly prevalent issue with serious impacts on children's outcomes. This is a gap in our knowledge that we urgently need to fill.

For a range of reasons, there have not been many high-quality evaluations in this space. We want to work collaboratively with a small number of programme providers and local authorities and/or Police and Crime Commissioners to identify promising programmes or services that could be evaluated for impact in the future.

Our work with programme providers and our local or regional partners will involve:

- Work to strengthen the theories of change behind programmes or services. We will aim to develop a precise understanding of how they work with children and families and what they aim to achieve, drawing on our extensive evaluation experience and expert understanding of the best available evidence.
- Identifying and addressing barriers to effective implementation of these programmes or services (for example, considering and addressing challenges around recruitment or retention of families)
- Conducting feasibility testing of programmes or services, with a focus on understanding acceptability of the intervention in local areas and how best to measure impact

Eligibility

We are inviting applications from programme providers, local authorities or Police and Crime Commissioners' offices.

We are interested in programmes or services that are targeted at children and families who have experienced or are at risk of experiencing domestic abuse, and which have a specific aim to improve outcomes for children who are victims of domestic abuse. This could include a wide range of activities such as:

- parenting programmes for parents who have been identified as at risk of domestic abuse
- parenting support for families experiencing domestic abuse which aim to help parents understand how family violence and abuse is negatively impacting their child/children
- therapeutic support for children who have experienced domestic abuse
- advocacy, mentoring, or relationship building support for children who have experienced domestic abuse
- perpetrator programmes which aim to change the attitudes and behaviours of perpetrators, which also have a focus on children's experiences and outcomes

We are also interested in approaches designed to respond to the needs of different population sub groups, for example children and families with young children (including pregnancy and up to the age of 2); children and families from minority ethnic backgrounds, with no recourse to public funds, with disabilities, or with experience of the care system. Programmes designed to support survivors or perpetrators which have a focus on children's experiences and outcomes are also eligible.

In the interests of a manageable scope for this work, we will not be able to consider universal services or wider approaches. For example, the following will be out of scope:

- programmes aimed at reducing parental conflict
- public health campaigns designed to raise awareness and change attitudes to domestic abuse
- new approaches to screening for domestic abuse
- professional education programmes designed to increase understanding of the prevalence and impact of domestic abuse

We appreciate that there may be differing views within the child protection and domestic abuse sectors concerning which approaches are safe and appropriate, and welcome interventions from differing perspectives at the application phase. While we are accepting applications from programmes or services at all stages of development, we have a preference for those that have reached the active delivery and implementation phase (as opposed to those in the development phase, not yet implementing).

We appreciate that in some cases it may be difficult to decide if an intervention or service is within scope of this work. If you would like to discuss this before making a submission, please contact ian.moore@eif.org.uk and we will be more than happy to work through this with you.

Timelines and Outputs

We expect to work with local areas between September and December 2022 to conduct interviews with key stakeholders (including programme developers, implementers, programme participants), co-facilitate workshops, and potentially conduct observations. Overall, we estimate partners will need to commit to 5 to 6 working days over the span of two months to complete this collaborative work.

There is no funding attached to this project for the delivery costs of the intervention. However, we will work with interested partners to explore opportunities for funding to cover the future costs of programme delivery alongside this work.

How to apply

This call opens on 1st July 2022 and will close on 5th August 2022. We will notify all applicants of our decision within 6 weeks.

Work with partners will be carried out between September and December 2022.
